Shitfuck: Owners Of Girlspooping.com Busted

Posted 04.02.2003 by Mastercrapper (159)

When terrorists attacked the World Trade Center and the Pentagon on September 11th, America's first responders, the brave men and women of the police and fire departments, risked life and limb to save trapped innocents. Then, just weeks later, when another miscreant scattered anthrax dust through the postal system, bringing fear and havoc from Gotham and Washington to Main Street USA, our frightened nation put its trust in another group of unsung everyday heroes: the Postal Inspectors. We who live and work in the Land of Liberty have continued to show our support for our first responders -- but during the eighteen months since the guys in plastic suits Hoovered out the halls of Congress, we have forgotten all about the House that Franklin Built. And it's a crying shame, too, because the Postal Inspectors have been working night and day to keep us safe.

A recent article describes obscenity charges brought by the Justice Department against the West Virginia-based purveyors of some very specialized, amateur adult videos sold online at a website called "girlspooping.com." A main supporting element of the Justice Department's case is the very extensive and thorough investigation of the girlspooping.com web site and its operators, Michael and Sharon Corbett, conducted by a US Postal Inspector: one Mr. Thomas W. Svitak.

After a Kentucky Postal Inspector notified Svitak that the Corbetts, who resided in Svitak's community, might be implicated in a violation of Title 18 of the United States Code, section 1461 (which interdicts the mailing of obscene materials), Svitak wasted no time in gathering evidence. In a 15-page affidavit, Svitak describes how, on three separate occasions, he ordered three videos from the girlspooping.com web site. Svitak further describes how he diligently viewed each of the nine videos in its entirety, verifying that the tapes portrayed the precise obscene acts described in the marketing verbiage on the girlspooping.com web site.

What citizenship! While a single order of a single videotape might have proven sufficient to press charges against the Corbetts, Svitak displayed a rare charity and faith in the doctrine of "innocent until proven guilty" -- refreshing, to be sure, in our nation's present climate of suspicion and doubt. Svitak judiciously held off his judgment, daring to question that a single videotape might have been a fluke, an outlier; perhaps the other tapes might have featured the Video Professor providing guidance about Microsoft Word, or Alvin and the Chipmunks singing Eastertide Favorites?

What investigatory prowess! One must admire Svitak's healthy suspicion of Internet marketing and his earnest desire to prevent mail fraud. After all, why should the videotapes contain scatological pornography simply because the website said they would?

What protection of the citizenry! Let us not overlook Svitak's indignant defense of the little man, the ordinary consumer all too often cheated by the dishonest butcher leaving an ounce of sliced ham out of every pound. By viewing each tape all the way to the end, Svitak made sure that each and every advertised act did indeed transpire, dutifully providing inventory in his affidavit.

In 1964, US Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart memorably defined pornography by stating, "I know it when I see it." Accordingly, Inspector Svitak must know it nine times better, which is useful knowledge. Thanks to Svitak's work, the Justice Department -- the long arm of the Ashcroft Superstars -- surely will have few difficulties in sending Mr. and Mrs. Corbett to the Big House.

A cynic might suggest that Svitak enjoyed his work. Accordingly, law enforcement authorities might reply to this truly unpatriotic, unappreciative citizen that it is important for undercover agents to "know thine enemy." The cynic might respond that the difference between a cop and a criminal is nothing more than a moustache and a badge. But any debate of Svitak's ethics merely distracts from the bigger question here, namely: why is it wrong to buy videos of an attractive woman masturbating while she drops a big shit?

Yes, gentle reader, Svitak's investigation revealed that the tapes primarily depicted women shitting and masturbating at the same time, although sometimes they took their shits before they masturbated, and sometimes the shitting and masturbation were preceded or followed by urination; and in very rare scenes, the women shit interactively with one another or into the mouth of a man who didn't seem to mind eating shit. While many of us prefer to watch Stallone movies or to play video games, in a world of such generous diversity, there will always be customers for "fringe" topics.

But perhaps scat porn isn't such a fringe topic, either. Svitak's investigation revealed that the Corbetts moved more than $70,000 of product in approximately three months! If one puts one's faith in the idea that, more than simply a mechanism for exchange, the free market is a de facto rating system for the popularity of goods and services, this small statistical survey suggests that scat porn must enjoy a significant measure of social acceptance.

It feels good when you shit. It feels good when you beat off. Presumably it must feel good when you shit while beating off, and, by transition, it seems reasonable that one might feel good watching another person shit while beating off, too. So if consumer preferences reflect a curiosity about (or infatuation with) diddling, piddling and pooping, then why should our US

Code forbid the shipment of videotapes depicting such topics across state lines?

It's not as though any animals or children were harmed in the production of the videos; nor are these behaviors particularly self-destructive. We all know that former Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders validated the health benefits of masturbation; and no responsible health professional would dare condemn as unhealthy the act of taking a dump -- indeed, we are encouraged to eat an ever growing bulk of fiber and vegetable mass to ensure that we move our food smoothly through our systems. So if masturbation is okay and pooping is okay, then surely masturbation while pooping must be okay!

(In all fairness, eating shit doesn't seem to be particularly okay, but in a nation where 60% of the population is overweight and a third of the population is obese, the health risks of eating shit seem somewhat lesser than the health risks of eating food. And shit can't taste much worse than tofu, wheat grass, or any of the $50 billion in dietary supplements the nation's fatties consume each year in a desperate hope to control their ballooning bellies.)

(Plus, recycling.)

The framers of the US Constitution built a nation that permits religious freedom, a principle borne out in the not-for-profit, tax-exempt status recently conferred to the Church of Scientology. If we Americans are willing to acknowledge as legitimately divine a race of aliens who purportedly dropped frozen people into a volcano, then why are we not willing to acknowledge as legitimately sexual a person who busts a nut watching a chick pop a squat? Why should the same government chartered to preserve life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness waste scarce resources on the interception of poop tapes?

In the final analysis, bedroom proclivities are much like sports. Some people enjoy "gear" sports, like golf, rock climbing, mountaineering or ice hockey -- activities that require participants to purchase pricey equipment. And some people enjoy "simple" sports, like jogging or soccer -- where a person can get started with virtually no gear whatsoever. To extend the analogy, people who enjoy "gear bedsports" can purchase any number of swings, ball gags, vinyl garments and motorized devices to enhance their pleasure. But the autoerotic scatologists of the world are the simple sportsmen of the bedroom -- a wonderfully earthy (and early Freudian) cadre of Luddites who can reach nirvana with nothing more than nature provides.

And so it seems unfair that the government should divert the Corbetts from their profitable and satisfying pursuit, and punish them for yet another victimless crime codified by a minority of anachronistic moralists. On the other hand, given the amount of public defecation and public masturbation that occurs in the nation's lock-ups, a brief incarceration might provide them with creative inspiration for their next oeuvre. If nothing else, we can sleep easy knowing that even in their jail cell, Mr. and Mrs. Corbett come equipped with everything they need to keep one another happy.

The Big Wiper (2244) -- 04.02.2003

MC: your thoughtful, well-reasoned essay should make all of us who enjoy PR pause a moment. Think about this. Although we have our disagreements on this site from time to time, I do think it is safe to say the vast majority of us who have joined are interested in shitting, the process, and shit, the substance. I have made no bones about my interest in both and have admitted openly that I enjoy discussing it with others. I find taking a good shit exhilarating. I have enjoyed others watching me. I have enjoyed watching them. Others on this site have expressed the humor, joy, unadulterated relief and, yes, even companionship, they have found in going to the bathroom in the presence of friends and family. Some, of course, are more shameful about this important aspect of life, but they, too, come here to express themselves and, I believe, to try to find support for their emotional outlook on something they will be doing until their last day on earth.

So, for a Poop Nazi to start making interest in shit (or scat) or whatever you want to call it, something on the order of a Carrie Nation Campaign is a bit unsettling, to say the least. There are, of course, tapes available of men shitting as well. All sorts of sites exist on the Internet catering to people of both genders who are drawn to others relieving themselves in all combinations. There is no reason for any of us who enjoy PR to take the position that this is all that far-removed from our interests here. It is, in fact, a matter of degree, and there is no reason to be the least bit ashamed of our interests anyway. But no one is ever forced to go to these sites and patronize their products. As long as this type of commerce is voluntary and age restrictions are respected, this truly falls into the 'victimless crime' arena.

Let's be really frank with each other here. I know that I have shared some pretty frank (and totally truthful, BTW) personal experiences with all of you. Many of you have done the same. We all know that we can't just blurt out a lot of the stuff we talk about on here at a cocktail party. We have to pick and choose our friends and our spots to enlighten, so to speak. Just yesterday, I got in the mail my Ass Phlegm tee shirt with the 10 Stages Of Pooping on the front. I do intend to wear it around the small Southern town of Tupelo, Mississippi (yeah, Elvis was born there and, as many of you know, died on the pot in Memphis--thangyouverramuch). It will be interesting to me to see what kind of reaction I get, if any, from the average Joe or Jane.

Bottom line here, though, is that interest in shit is and of itself is not prurient, whether it is connected to women or men doing it on tape or some other concept. I happen to believe that sexuality is a very complicated and amazing thing among us humans. The Poop Nazis of the world want to label all activity, categorize it and pigeon-hole it, reluctantly approving only the tip of the iceberg when it comes to all that is humanly possible among us.

I can guarantee you that there are some moral posturers out there who would shut down PR in a minute if they knew it existed. In fact, I believe they might even view it as a bigger threat to their world/religious view than sites selling tapes of men and women shitting and/or masturbating while doing it.

They might see, as well they should, that a site and a movement (pun intended) like PR has the beneficial effect of bringing the entire subject of pooping out of the closet and into the mainstream. Hey, so many people want to be more relaxed and open about their bathroom habits, but there are so many strains (again, pun intended) in our culture, which does have a Puritannical heritage right up-front, that work against that.

Poopers--keep on pooping and bringing your stories here. Let's be proud of one another and ourselves. And thanks, mastercrapper, for an eloquent expression of an issue which should be important to us all.

Peace and Plop! TBW

Mastercrapper, I enjoy reading your posts. You are probably the best writer on PR. I can't defend turd burglars, but I understand your point. By the way, I realize 'turd burglars' is mainly used in reference to homosexuals, but, I think it's a misnomer. People who engage in the above type of behavior are true 'turd burgurlars'.

I've said it before but will say it again, "I would rather have bin Laden as a nextdoor neighbor than John Ashcroft as an Attorney General, he is a truly dangerous man with very sick ideas.

SoopirV900 (not verified) -- 04.02.2003

I agree to a point with The Big Wiper, but only so far as to say that pooping is natural, and to be interested in poop (in a non-pathologic way) is also natural. It is human nature to be atuned with what is produced by one's own colon. It shows signs of health, eating habits, you name it, your turds can show it. I've heard rumors that several State Police applications have a question on it to the extent of, "Do you look into the toilet bowl after a bowel movement before flushing?" It's been said that if you answer "No", you're in for an investigation because it's just not natural to ignore you feces, and could be indicative of a psychosocial disorder. On the other hand, what right does the USPS have to inspect mail? ISn't the purpose of the postal service to tranfer material from one private citizen to another (one who has requested said material in the first place?) without misdelivering it to someone else (and in the case of porn, that someone else must surely be a minor)? In so saying, don't we buy postage to ensure that our packages (whether they be fresh baked cookies for a college-bound relative or just a bondage video for a bound love slave) be delivered in rain, sleet, snow etc? I know Ashcroft is pushing for a 1984 scenario, but that doesn't jive with the fact that the USPS has been the defacto police-state since it began? I personally haven't broken any postal laws (with the exception of sending cash to a nephew (for birthdays and hollidays) now and then...but if the postal service legally can't look inside, then why is that illegal?). Christ, it just ain't right.

MB (not verified) -- 05.03.2005

First to go is scat porn and fisting (the producer of Chloe and Alisha Klass's "Tampa Tushy Fest, Part I" video paid a obscenity fine). Who knows what law enforcement will consider obscene next? Gangbangs? Girl-girl videos? Anal?

Is collegegirlspooping.com legal?

i've just found out about "scat" porn by accident and nearly puked whilst looking at it. Scat porn is the sickest thing i've ever heard of or seen and i reckon people who enjoy eating and being covered in shit need their heads examined.

PoopClips (not verified) -- 01.09.2006

We took our scat web site offshore, and it has no sexual content. It still gets the point across as Girlspooping.com did. It seems that scat related material can be legal as long as it is not combined with sexual conduct. We're taking no risks however with the Feds and run the whole thing outside the United States.

Great comment! +1 point

Bunga Din (1239) -- 01.10.2006

PoopClips you came here to advertise, does that mean that on your new site you will put a forum for visitors to do the same?

The Dumpster (2506) -- 06.10.2006

The point is, folks--the conduct described is illegal. So, either we enforce the laws, or we change them, but don't waste your time criticizing the people who are doing their job of simply enforcing the laws that are on the books. Write your Congressperson!

And, I think it is sorta funny, reading all the "Ashcroft is the Antichrist" posts, above. Looking back on it, tell me ONE thing he did that was all that bad.

The Shit Volcano (3737) -- 06.10.2006

Other than tarping the statue of Justice and being a prude?

Anyway, I am not a supporter of scat porn. I think it's disgusting! However, I am at a loss to find what these people did that was illegal. Were the girls under age? That would be illegal.

Not to sound sarcastic or rude (except for the Ashcroft comment), because I'm not trying to be, what law did they break. As a lawyer, maybe you, Dumpster, can describe this in a way us non-lawyerese speakers can understand.

I'm sorry, but it appears that my karma ran over your dogma.

They broke the law about sending illegal stuff through the mail. What you are disagreeing with is whether it should be illegal or not.

The theory behind making certain things illegal to send through the mail is also market-based: If you can't (legally) ship it, the cost goes up, and the market goes down. The State has always exercised its police power to protect the public health, safety, welfare, and morals. I think people on this site are bothered most by legislation regarding public "morals," because in our post-modern society, everyone claims the right to do what is right in his own eyes.

But surely most or all of us would agree that kiddie porn should be illegal to send through the mail. This is strictly a moral issue, and once you concede the State's right to legislate regarding morals, the only way to limit it is through the political process.

(Note: I just rediscovered this story in doing research for my upcoming JOAP II article, which is going to deal with certain aspects of legislating morality.)

healthy 1 (1423) -- 10.12.2006

Ahhh, The American public's tax dollars hard at work, and big brother watchin' us again.

Hmm. Like TSV said, how did the government find the site in the first place. Hmmm, maybe John Asscroft secretly likes watching women poop?

Anyway, there is an old song from the 40's "To Each His Own". As long as nobody is getting hurt or property is not threatened, what the hell business does the government have telling us how to live our lives?

I personally think that "scat porn" is absolutley gross but, I admit that I can get turned on seeing a cute woman dropping a log.

And if someone wants to go to the extreme of ordering DVD's of women pooping, so fucking what, what is the government going to try to regulate next?

Just when I think I heard everything, something else comes along to blow me out of the water. WOW, do we have any figures on what was spent to bust the website?

Good Lord, now I've really heard it all!

Born to clog your bog, with a giant log.

I found your site listed on a search results page. The listing indicated there were videos of women pooping for the eager camersman. Is this true? I do not see any videos listed for FREE or PAID. Please email me details.

daphne (3522) -- 02.05.2008

Email you details? What do you think this is, a porn drive through window? Look buddy, if you want to know what this site is about, read the front page.

And no, you cannot have your Diet Coke with no ice. It causes us to use more pop to fill the cup and we lose money. Two ketchups are enough. Quit complaining. Pull up to the next window and have a nice day.
